

Stony the Road We Trod: Exploring Alabama's Civil Rights Legacy

The Alabama Humanities Alliance invites Alabama's K-12 educators to participate in a week-long field study of Alabama's role in the movement for human and civil rights. This immersive, residential experience (July 6-12, 2025) will take you to sites of conscience across the state, and help you bring this history to life for your students. Selection is competitive. Apply by March 31, 2025.

Educators selected for this opportunity will:

- Interact with leaders, foot soldiers, and scholars of the civil rights movement
- Travel to key sites of memory and sites preserving this history statewide
- Access invaluable primary sources and archival footage for research
- Receive copies of all assigned texts and classroom resources
- Develop a lesson plan before departing for home

Project director: Martha Bouyer, Ph.D., educator, Alabama Humanities Fellow, and executive director of the Historic Bethel Baptist Church Community Restoration Fund

Alabama educators selected to participate will receive a $500 stipend. Group transportation, accommodations, and most meals are provided..
